

Kimberlé Crenshaw Instructors' Guide: Free Resources on Intersectionality, Critical Race Theory across Disciplines

Kimberlé Crenshaw is coming to Boise State! The Women's Center and Gender Studies Program are co-presenting a visit from Crenshaw with support from numerous other campus departments and organizations.

She is an internationally renowned scholar; a law professor at Columbia and UCLA, her work on intersectionality has been foundational for analyzing the interrelationship between categories of experience/identity and social inequalities. We have built this guide to help you incorporate materials for your discipline (see below) into your classes to help promote Crenshaw's visit here. Below you will find discipline-specific video links, articles (either free or through Albertson Library). You can also point students here to explore and bring to class some of their findings.

So welcome, and if you have things to add, or would like more or different information on Crenshaw, her work and impact, please don't hesitate to contact Ginna Husting at ghusting@boisestate.edu. I'd be delighted to help you quickly find sources and information to easily add to your course! You can also get more information by calling the Women's Center or going to their web page.

Brief Bio of Crenshaw:

Kimberlé Crenshaw (J.D. Harvard; L.L.M. University of Wisconsin; B.A. Cornell University) is a professor of Law at Columbia University and UCLA. She is famous for creating a foundational tool or framework, called “intersectionality,” for understanding the multiple forces shaping social inequalities. Intersectional analysis allows us to map the ways that race intersects with gender, ability, nationality, language, and other key categories of social existence and inequality. Intersectionality helps us unpack how these categories shape both individual experience and the social world at large. Intersectionality is critical for thinking about how current policies, practices, and discourses from Criminal Justice to Literature can be changed and improved.
